At the Smithsonia American Art Museum in Washington, D.C., you might see two shoes. They are painted with clouds and stars. They look like shoes that you could wear on your feet. But they are really made out of carefully formed clay material. The artist William Wilhelmi made them.

W Studio is on a quiet street in Corpus Christi, Texas. This is where William makes his art. He says working with clay can be difficult. But he says it is also very pleasant. And it allows him to use his sense of color and shape in many ways. He finds new ideas by traveling and reading books.

C)请听下面一段独白。

I'm Pam. One of my favorite hobbies is paper folding. It is the art of folding paper in different ways that makes beautiful objects like a bird, a box, or a balloon. Paper folding has been around for hundreds of years, and it is still popular today. There are several keys to doing paper folding correctly. First, use scissors to cut your paper into the shape you want. Next, you need to use a surface to create your paper folding shapes to get the best results. And then, you should follow the directions carefully for making any object, or your shape might not turn out the correct way. Be sure to make strong lines in the paper when folding the paper. This will help make sure that the paper folds always line up.

In some schools, students begin to use electronic schoolbags in class. Is it good or bad? Here are my group members' ideas about it.

Lily thinks an electronic schoolbag is not heavy and easy to carry. We can get information easily. And it also makes us more interested in lessons. Peter says if he uses it all day, it will be bad for his eyes. And he doesn't think it can replace textbooks. Tina thinks it is expensive but it can protect the environment because people don't need to cut down trees to make paper books.

In my opinion, electronic schoolbags are useful, convenient and they have more functions. But I suppose they are bad for our eyes and waste energy. In a word, we shouldn't use them more in the future.
